QUESTIONS TO SPARK STUDENT DISCUSSIONS
ABOUT SUCCESS AND FAILURE

• Have you ever experienced a significant failure? What was that like, what did you learn about yourself or others from that experience?

• Think of a major life goal at which you would like to succeed. What are you willing to do to achieve that success? What trade-offs are you willing to make? What will that success “cost” you and others in your life?

• What might you say to a friend …

  …who is compromising their health in order to get better grades?
  …who has taken on too many activities and now is overstressed and not doing any of them well?
  …who has devoted themselves obsessively to only one activity in the single-minded pursuit of success?
  …who is excelling at what they do but seems to experience no joy in life?
  …who is about to submit a paper plagiarized from the internet, to avoid failing a course?

• What are the pros and cons of striving for perfection? Is it possible/desirable to be perfect?

• If learning and growing always means you are trying things you can't already do, or striving to improve on your past performance, or learning things you don't already know, how can one ever be "perfect"? How can you be perfect and learn/grow at the same time?